Why is diversity in design an issue that the industry needs to embrace?

Now, more than ever, it is imperative that our society focus on inclusivity and diversity. Bringing diversity to design means not only focusing on representing people of all demographics and cultures, but gender as well. The more inclusive and diverse the design industry becomes, the more we as a society will grow as innovators who are listening and including voices from many perspectives, backgrounds and experiences.

How do you incorporate your own background, history and heritage into your own design work?

My trip to Kenya truly inspired me to dig deeper into my background and heritage. That trip taught me to think more outside of the box and refuse to limit my creativity according to what others may deem "suitable" or "acceptable". I have a renewed sense of home designing now, one that emanates peace, prosperity and heart in initial planning before any stylistic design conversations happen. That's what my girls in Africa rekindled in me.

About Breegan's Design:

My overall design philosophy has always been that luxury should be both attainable and approachable. I really loved the build up of finding inspiration behind the design and seeing how sourcing options from so many different shops can really bring an idea to life.

Earthy tones are making a comeback so that was definitely part of the inspiration. Also, the stone was really the center of the design and I honed in on that as a starting point. I wanted to incorporate warm gold undertones throughout while adding depth as well as pops of color. Some of my favorite pieces would be the Council Dining Table by Mikel Welch from Yosemite Home Decor and the Surfrider Bar Cabinet by Hooker Furniture. Both of these pieces are so beautifully made and such great foundations to build a space off of.
